

AIRCRAFT CRASHES IN EAST ANGLIA 1914 - 2020. T. N. Hancock

As a retired librarian I have long been aware that all aspects of local history should be recorded for the benefit of future generations and this is my attempt to cover just one of those aspects; it will surprise many people to know that a minimum of some 7,500 aircraft have crashed and been 'written-off' (eg, did not fly again) in the traditional counties of Cambridgeshire, Essex (including that part now in the London Borough of Havering), Huntingdonshire, Norfolk and Suffolk, since powered flight began and this list attempts to give the bare details of these - it should be emphasised that these are the crashes that resulted in the aircraft being destroyed, NOT those, of which there were many, which crash-landed, were salvaged by 54 MU at Cambridge or the American Air Depots at Abbots Ripton (airfield at Alconbury), Hitcham (airfield Watton) and Troston (airfield Honington), repaired at civilian repair factories, such as those in the area at Cambridge and Horsey Toll, and then flew again. I use the words 'this list attempts to give' advisedly as the recording of these crashes was done, quite frequently, to the whim of an RAF clerk (and even worse, as far as locations go, USAAF clerks!) who may have made mistakes in locations and other details. The airfields in the traditional counties covered are – (dates are those between which flying took place)

Newspaper reports on wartime crashes are rare but those in peacetime may carry an account in the local press. Each entry gives the aircraft's serial number, its type, its unit and that unit's home airfield (with the county if not in the area covered) and the number of fatal casualties if known; it should be remembered that a great many young airmen died in these crashes (signified [where known] by a number followed by 'k' after the appropriate entry), often in horrific circumstances and also, occasionally, servicemen or civilians on the ground (shown as '+' after the aircrew deaths). Civilian aircraft have their registration, type and location of crash given. Locations in the text show the counties in which the crash was located at the time; those in the index show the present day authorities.

SOURCES

This list is compiled from the information given in many books published by Air-Britain Historians Ltd, and the volumes of 'Bomber Command Losses' by W. R. Chorley, and 'Coastal Command Losses', published by Midland Books. Two web-sites also proved very useful for the American WW2 crashes - accident-report.com and www.aviationarchaeology.com. Richard Cawsey's 'Fatal Air Crashes' is also very useful

APPENDICES

These can be found at the end of the list and consist of an aircraft type index, a geographical location index showing the current local authorities in whose areas the crash took place, and a list of the abbreviations used.

WORLD WAR 1

The crashes listed under World War One are nowhere near comprehensive, either in number or in their exact locations which were often not recorded; however, as can be seen in later periods, most crashes took place at or near aerodromes, during the demanding tasks of take-off and landing. Thus, many of the below did happen at their bases. During WW1 most of the region's aerodromes were involved in training pilots and in defence against air attacks by aeroplanes and airships.

BETWEEN THE WARS

There was a massive rundown of the RAF during 1919-20. The aircraft were becoming more reliable and the pace of training slackened so that the number of accidents reduced and there were fewer casualties in any case, due to the introduction of parachutes. The RAF began to increase in size significantly during the 1930s and operational types, as opposed to those used for training, began to arrive at newly-opened airfields. These more sophisticated and powerful aircraft, equipped with such novelties as flaps, retractable undercarriages and enclosed cockpits (not liked initially!), increased the number of accidents as pilots converted from the elderly biplanes. As Germany became the potential threat from the mid 1930s the RAF's bomber airfields were mainly concentrated in this region. In addition to the military crashes civilian-owned aircraft and aerodromes began to appear from the early 1920s on, contributing to the number.

World War II.

Germany had replaced France as the threat during the late 1930s and the RAF's light and medium bomber squadrons were now based in the region within range of Germany – and fighter squadrons were also based to combat Luftwaffe bombers. From 1940 Stirling heavy bombers entered service and their weak undercarriages made them very accident prone on take-offs and landings; fortunately their strong construction meant that fatalities were relatively light in these crashes. In 1942 the first units of the US 8th Air Force began to arrive and, together with the US 9th AF, by late 1943 began to dominate the East Anglian skies, but with the end of the war all had gone by early 1946 (it should be noted that not all the many US crashes listed might have been write-offs they at least caused major damage). This is not to say that the RAF had been idle and the RAF's bombers, particularly the Pathfinder units, were active until the end. Fighters too, especially night fighters, operated in defence of the UK and some of the airfields vacated by the US 9th AF as they moved to France in the autumn of 1944 were taken over by Transport Command, and from these were launched the paratroops and gliders that crossed the Rhine in March 1945.

It is unimaginable that the scale of air accidents and fatalities seen in the area during WW2 will ever be repeated, a fact for which we must all be grateful; they were due to combat damage, to pilot error as these young men were flying in bad weather, at night in pitch black conditions (due to the 'black-out') and, in the case of the Heavy Conversion Units during the first three years of the war, in old worn-out aircraft which had been replaced by new aircraft in the operational squadrons. The USAAF flew in close formation so that collisions were not infrequent. Thus, many of the young men killed saw no operational flying but their contribution must not be forgotten; sometimes, when aircraft crashed, civilians or groundcrew were also killed, shown by a plus sign and a number after the number of aircrew killed (where known). USAAF reports do not specify the number of aircrew killed in each crash, only that it was a crash which caused fatalities.

THE COLD WAR.

The RAF now decreased significantly in size and many of the military airfields in the region had by now closed though several were used by civilian clubs and owners. However the USSR was now seen as a new threat to the UK and the USA and it was this that brought the USAF Strategic Air Command to several, greatly developed WW 2 bases during the 50s. Even so the number of aircraft and thus accidents were greatly reduced as aircraft and their engines were becoming more and more reliable, training periods were extended, much improved radio, radar, other navigation aids and greatly improved air traffic control reduced the dangers of night flying and bad weather, and ejector seats meant a much better chance of survival if a crash occurred. The reduced accident rate was such that just one crash became a national media item by the 1970s.
