

AIRCRAFT CRASHES IN THE ISLE OF MAN, NORTHERN IRELAND AND SCOTLAND 1913 - 2019.

T. N. Hancock

As a retired librarian I have long been aware that all aspects of local history should be recorded for the benefit of future generations and this is my attempt to cover just one of those aspects; it will surprize many people to know that a minimum of some 5,700 aircraft have crashed and been 'written-off' (eg, did not fly again) in the Isle of Man, Northern Ireland & Scotland, since powered flight began and this list attempts to give the bare details of these - it should be emphasised that these are the crashes that resulted in the aircraft being destroyed, NOT those, of which there were many, which crash-landed, were salvaged by 23 MU Aldergrove, 56 MU Inverness and 57 MU Wig Bay, repaired at civilian repair factories, such as those in this area at Airdrie, Balado Bridge, Greenock and Prestwick and then flew again. USAAF aircraft were repaired, or modified, at the large Air Base Depot at Langford Lodge. I use the words 'this list attempts to cover' advisedly as the recording of these crashes was down, quite frequently, to the whim of an RAF/FAA/USAAF clerk who may have made mistakes in locations and other details.

It is intended that this list will give a basis for further research to those interested in a particular crash. Newspaper reports on wartime crashes are rare but those in peacetime may carry an account in the local press. Each entry gives the aircraft's serial number, its type, its unit and that unit's home airfield (with the county if not in the area covered) and the number of fatal casualties if known; it should be remembered that a great many young airmen died in these crashes (signified [where known] by a number followed by 'k' after the appropriate entry), often in horrific circumstances and also, occasionally, civilians or ground personnel on the ground (shown as '+' after the aircrew deaths). Civilian aircraft have their registration, type and location of crash given.

Airfields covered in this volume (dates are those within which flying took place)

SOURCES

This list is compiled from the information given in many books published by Air-Britain Historians Ltd, and the volumes of 'Bomber Command Losses' by W. R. Chorley, and 'Coastal Command Losses', published by Midland Books. Two web-sites also proved very useful for the American WW2 crashes - accident-report.com and www.aviationarchaeology.com. R. Cawsey's 'Fatal air crashes' is most useful for WW1.

APPENDICES

These may be found at the end of the list and consist of an aircraft type index, a geographical location index and a list of the abbreviations used.

WORLD WAR 1

The crashes listed under World War One are nowhere near comprehensive, either in number or in their exact locations which were often not recorded; however, as can be seen in later periods, most crashes took place at or near aerodromes, during the demanding tasks of take-off and landing. Thus, many of the below did happen at their bases. During WW1 most of the region's aerodromes were involved in training pilots, with a large number being killed, particularly flying the tricky Sopwith Camel. The RNAS had bases all around the coast from the Tweed to the Irish Sea from which were mounted anti-submarine patrols by aeroplanes, seaplanes and airships while the RFC patrolled against Zeppelin raids from the Tweed to Edinburgh.

BETWEEN THE WARS

There was a massive rundown of the RAF during 1919-20 and it withdrew from Eire when the country gained independence. The aircraft were becoming more reliable and the pace of training slackened so that the number of accidents reduced and there were less casualties in any case, due to the introduction of parachutes. The RAF began to increase in size significantly during the 1930s and operational types, as opposed to those used for training, began to arrive at newly-opened airfields. These more sophisticated and powerful aircraft, equipped with such novelties as flaps, retractable undercarriages and enclosed cockpits (not liked initially!), increased the number of accidents as pilots converted from the elderly biplanes. The Fleet Air Arm also greatly expanded during the 1930s, taking over some airfields from the RAF when it became a part of the Royal Navy again in 1937. In addition to the military crashes civilian-owned aircraft and aerodromes began to appear from the early 1920s on, contributing to the number whilst small airlines began to be formed.

World War II.

When WW2 broke out in September 3rd 1939 all civilian aircraft were grounded or impressed for use by the RAF and FAA and during the next five years the northern UK saw almost every sort of air warfare. Coastal Command bases were dotted around the coast from the Firth of Forth, via the Northern Islands, to Northern Ireland; on the east aircraft patrolled the North Sea and its convoys and attacked enemy shipping off the Norwegian and German coasts whilst from the north round to the west long-range landplanes and flying boats operated far out over the Atlantic escorting the convoys carrying vital supplies from North America. Protecting these airfields, the naval ports and the heavy industrial areas of southern Scotland and Northern Ireland, were the day and night fighters of Fighter Command, from the first day of the war to the last. Pilot training was extensive over on the east, ranging from Elementary Flying Schools to Heavy Conversion Units, while the Irish Sea was ringed by airfields which trained navigator/observers, bomb-aimers, wireless operators and gunners. The Fleet Air Arm, from 1938 part of the Royal Navy, had training airfields around its bases in eastern Scotland and, increasingly in western Scotland, where carrier-based units came ashore between voyages for rest and for training which increased greatly from the autumn of 1944 as did FAA activity in Northern Ireland as it trained for the Pacific war.

The USAAF had few operational units in the region but some bomber-crew training was carried out in Northern Ireland whilst aircraft ferried from the US by air or sea were assembled/modified for operational use and the large Air Depot at Langford Lodge. Prestwick was the eastern terminal of the North Atlantic ferry route.

Very few of the crashes in this list were the result of enemy action; the vast majority were accidents caused by several factors – aircraft and engines were much less reliable than those today; inexperienced pilots and navigators, often flying at night over blacked-out countryside with very few of the navigation aids taken for granted today and often in bad weather, made mistakes which proved fatal in many cases; and finally, a hazard particular to northern Britain, there were numerous hills, moors and mountains into which aircraft flew with monotonous regularity as can be seen from the lists. Aircraft generally flew at much lower heights than today, 2,000 ft being a norm. Crashes on high ground meant that surviving aircrew, injured or not, might have to wait hours for rescuers to reach them.

The number of crashes will surprise many but a slight mitigating factor is that flying units were operating very large numbers of aircraft, with training units such as that at Montrose flying 120 at any one time.

THE COLD WAR.

The RAF now decreased significantly although not as drastically as in 1919 because the USSR was now seen as a new threat to the UK, but the number of aircraft and thus accidents were greatly reduced as were the number of airfields. There was a temporary increase in accidents in the late '40s and early 1950s, as pilots converted to jet-powered aircraft during their advanced training and the tempo of training increased as a result of the Korean war. However, aircraft and their engines were becoming more and more reliable, training periods were extended, much improved radio, radar, other navigation aids and greatly improved air traffic control reduced the dangers of night flying and bad weather, and ejector seats meant a much better chance of survival if a crash occurred. The reduced accident rate was such that just one crash became a national media item by the 1970s. Increasingly civil aircraft begin to figure in the lists and the Fleet Air Arm did much of its fixed wing training at Lossiemouth and Milltown. During the 1970s to the 1990s AAC and FAA helicopters saw active service during the Northern Irish conflict.

Appendix 2. Locations.

The place names in this index are all shown in the Philips Navigator Road Atlas, in my opinion the best UK road atlas by far. If a crash location was at a location not shown in the atlas index then the next nearest location from the atlas is given as a reference. It should be remembered that the locations are only approximate and that using the term 'farm' means on that farm's land not at the actual farmhouse. In the area covered in this book there were many crashes into remote high ground, most of which I have found via Google – again the nearest location given in the Atlas is used. In the text the traditional counties are given but in this index I have used the current local authorities.. Unfortunately the Road Atlas does not cover Northern Ireland so I have used the Ordnance Survey Ireland..
