

AIRCRAFT CRASHES IN THE SOUTH EASTERN COUNTIES (SUSSEX, KENT, SURREY and LONDON [south of the Thames] 1914-2009. T. N. Hancock.

It will surprize many people to know that a minimum of some 5,200 aircraft have crashed and been 'written-off (eg, did not fly again) in this area since powered flight began and this list attempts to give the bare details of these - it should be emphasised that these are the crashes that resulted in the aircraft being destroyed, NOT those, of which there many, which crash-landed, were salvaged during WW 2 by the RAF Maintenance Units at Faygate West Sussex (49 MU) and Sundridge Kent (86 MU), repaired at civilian repair factories at Brooklands, Croydon, Gatwick, Rochester and Thornton Heath, and flew again. I use the words 'this list attempts to give' advisedly as the recording of these crashes was down, quite frequently, to the whim of an RAF clerk who may have made mistakes in locations and other details. It is intended that this list will give a basis for further research to those interested in a particular crash. Newspaper reports on wartime crashes are rare but those in peacetime may carry an account in the local press. Each entry gives the date, the aircraft's serial (identification) number, it's type, the unit it was serving with at the time it crashed and that unit's home airfield (including the county if outside the area); it should be remembered that a great many young airmen died in these crashes (signified [where known] by a number followed by 'k' after the appropriate entry), often in horrific circumstances and also, occasionally, civilians on the ground (shown as '+' after the aircrew deaths). Civilian aircraft have their registration, type and location of crash given and the fatalities if known. Crashes in the sea are included only if within 10 miles of the coast. The airfields covered in the text are:

GREATER LONDON SOUTH OF THE THAMES - Joyce Green (Vickers 1911-19, RFC/RAF 1914-19), Wimbledon Common (early aviation).

SOURCES

This list is compiled from the information given in many books published by Air- Britain Historians Ltd, and the volumes of 'Bomber Command Losses' by W. R. Chorley, and 'Coastal Command Losses', published by Midland Books. Civilian crashes are noted from Air Britain's and the CAA's crash reports. Two web-sites also proved very useful for the American WW2 crashes - accident-report.com and www.aviationarchaeology.com. Fatal air crashes by R.Cawley very useful for WW1.

APPENDICES

These may be found at the end of the list and consist of an aircraft type index, a geographical location index and a list of the abbreviations used.

Early Aviation 1910-1914

There were two very early aerodromes in the area, Brookland SR and Eastchurch K, and at both of these many early pilots learnt to fly and built and tested new aeroplanes – and sometimes died doing this.

WORLD WAR 1

The crashes listed under World War One are nowhere near comprehensive, either in number or in their exact locations and although the aircraft were based in the counties covered not all of the crashes may have happened in those counties; however the short range of the aircraft means that it is probable most of the crashes happened in the vicinity of their home aerodromes and during the demanding operations of take-offs and landings. It should be borne in mind that parachutes were not used by the British air forces until the early 1920s.

BETWEEN THE WARS

There was a massive rundown of the RAF during 1919-20, resulting in much fewer airfields; the aircraft were becoming more reliable the introduction of parachutes meant less casualties when crashes did occur. During the 1920s and early '30s the only country militarily strong enough to be considered a possible threat to the UK was France so that London was encircled by fighter stations. The RAF began to increase in size significantly during the 1930s and modern operational types began to arrive. These more sophisticated and powerful aircraft, equipped with such novelties as flaps, retractable undercarriages and enclosed cockpits (not liked initially!), increased the number of accidents as pilots converted from the elderly biplanes - witness the Hurricane crashes during 1939. Training schools for the new RAFVR were established at flying clubs, and civilian-owned aircraft and aerodromes began to appear from the early 1920s on, contributing to the number of crashes. In addition scheduled airline services began between Croydon (London's airport) and European capitals and various aircraft manufacturers built several prototype aircraft which did not go into production but still crashed!

World War II.

When WW2 broke out in September 1939 all civilian aircraft were grounded or impressed for use by the RAF and FAA. Up until the fall of France in June 1940 things in the SE were quiet, the RAF being in action over France and the Low Countries: the lack of air activity was also due to the very bad winter of 1939/40 which meant many aircraft were grounded. A massive expansion of the RAF took place during this breathing space and crashes increased in number, most taking place on or near airfields as taking-off and landing were the most dangerous areas of flight; the RAF's clerks did not specify exactly where a crash took place so those given as at an airfield could have been within a half-mile radius.

The Germans had occupied France by the end of June and the RAF had flown home across the Channel – both sides now had a breathing space to build up their strengths in aircraft and personnel and the Luftwaffe moved into airfields in France, within easy reach of southern Britain; suddenly the SE was England's first line of aerial defence and from July, for three months, raged one of the greatest air battles ever, the Battle of Britain. Aircraft from both sides crashed almost daily during this period and many young men were killed but, as will be seen, many bailed out and survived.

The Luftwaffe, after its defeat by the RAF by day turned, as had the RAF before it, to night bombing and the night fighters took over; daylight bombing raids were limited largely to hit and run raids on South Coast towns and the RAF's day fighters moved on to the offensive with large numbers escorting smaller numbers of light bombers on raids on Luftwaffe airfields and other targets, in France, Belgium and Holland. These operations were quite costly in men and machines and aircraft shot down were largely crashing in continental Europe rather than in the UK, so that the majority of crashes in the SE became accidental rather than by enemy action though damaged fighters and bombers used the airfields as they were the first they came across, particularly Manston which, in time, became an official emergency airfield, with extra long and wide runways.

The RAF and, later, the USAAF began to build up for the invasion of Europe and new air strips, basically fields with wire mesh runways and tented accommodation, sprang up around the area for use by the fighters and fighter bombers operating over France, whilst light bombers were based at the larger airfields. Manston became an emergency airfield for aircraft damaged over Europe and other airfields became 'any port in a storm'.

The build up for the invasion of Europe continued and some American fighter groups moved into newly constructed advanced landing grounds, adding to the crowded skies. However, as airstrips became available in France from July on, the RAF and USAAF units began to move across the Channel. The first of 1,000s of V-1s began to fall in June and fighters were posted in to deal with these.

THE COLD WAR.

The RAF now decreased significantly but not as drastically as in 1919 as the USSR was seen as a new threat to the UK but approaching from the east. Several fighter stations remained open to protect London but the number of aircraft and thus accidents were greatly reduced. and aircraft and their engines were becoming more and more reliable. Training periods were extended, much improved radio, radar, other navigation aids and greatly improved air traffic control reduced the dangers of night flying and bad weather, and ejector seats meant a much better chance of survival if a crash occurred. By 1960 the concept of fighter protection for the civilian population was abandoned and the few fighter stations were now in the east of the UK to protect the bomber airfields – thus military airfields in the south-east greatly reduced in number until the last closed in 1974 (apart from SAR helicopters at Manston) to be replaced by numerous civil airports, aerodromes and private airstrips.
